

Charlie and the Chocolate Factory

Many years ago, a peculiar owner of the greatest chocolate factory in the world, Willy Wonka, opened the doors to his factory to five lucky children. Five golden tickets were hidden beneath the wrappers of his famous chocolate bars. The search was extremely popular.

Augustus Gloop, a disgusting child, un-wrapped the first ticket! Veruca Salt, an awful brat, received the next ticket from her father. Violet Bureaugarde, a naughty gum chewer, discovered the third ticket. Mike Teavee, a television watching kid, won the fourth ticket. Charlie's family had little money to spend on chocolate but one day he had a tremendous stroke of luck. He spotted a shimmering, shining coin buried deep under the snow. Grabbing the coin, he sprinted to the nearest shop. He knew exactly what to spend his money on! Charlie Bucket, an ordinary poor boy, claimed the final golden ticket.

The following day, Charlie and Grandpa Joe set out on their adventure. They looked up in awe at the factory gates.

"Welcome my little friends. Welcome to the factory." Willy Wonka called out.

Things immediately started to go wrong. Augustus Gloop fell into the hot chocolate river after taking a drink! At that moment, Verruca Salt was thrown on top of the trash whilst chasing a squirrel. Unfortunately, Violet Bureaugarde increased in size and turned into a giant blueberry. Amazingly, Mike Teavee shrunk himself via Wonka Vision! With eyes wide open, Charlie watched, bewildered.

Only Charlie remained. Willy Wonka congratulated him for winning.

"What have I won?" Charlie asked.

"My factory of course!" exclaimed Willy Wonka.

With that they exploded through the roof and above the clouds!

If Charlie had not found the golden ticket, then his life would not have been transformed.